"Army Family Strong...Lightening Their Load" Forum at KSU Union Hall

Kansas State University is continuing a partnership with Fort Riley by creating an institute to study the health of military families. The Institute for the Health and Security of Military Families will help coordinate the multitude of research and outreach programs that support the well-being of military personnel, veterans, and their families who have experienced deployment.

Mrs. Diana Durbin and LTG Robert E. Durbin, Special Assistant to the Chief of Staff, U.S. Army for Enterprise Management and Panel on Military Family Issues will host a forum on Friday, October 2, 2009 starting at 1:30pm in the K-State Student Union.

The new institute will bring together effects of trauma on deployed personnel and their families; the impact of deployment on marriage, children, employment and family income; and the cumulative effects of multiple deployments. In addition, the institute will also help structure and organize the various programs already in place for military families.

This announcement comes at a critical time as more and more published research is finding that military families are experiencing stress, especially children. Research will help us gain a better researchers, educators and professionals to tackle issues including the understanding on this important issue and provide valuable information on needed resources to effectively address these findings.

The institute is among the top priorities for the School of Family Studies and Human Services, which was awarded $13 million in funding in 2008 for research related to military families.

LTG Robert E. Durbin was previously the Commander of the 1st Infantry Division at Fort Riley.

For more information, please contact the Junction City Military Affairs Council office at (785) 238-1270.
